

10,000 MORE HEROES BACK FROM EUROPE

6,000 Land in Swarms on the Hudson River Piers and Hoboken Sees Parade.

MEDALS WORN BY MANY

Noisy Harbor Welcome for Four Big Transports and Cheers for Veterans.

Speaking about returning troops—ships—as everybody is—nobody came ashore at this port yesterday except almost 6,000 officers and men, not to mention almost 4,000 more soldiers who were unloaded at the same time at Newport News, Va.

Oliver drab officers and men stepped off four ships, which docked in or near Manhattan yesterday, in so congested a mass that for a time the observer couldn't put from his mind the idea that a plague of light brown bees was swarming along the upper bay and North River waterfronts—if one may use the hateful word "plague" in speaking of such thunderously welcome guests.

Civilians of distinction came across the pond to town too. Coming happily down gangplanks on all sides of the North River all the time were, among others, War Worker (Mrs.) Charles Dana Gibson and therefore one of the "Langhorne sisters of Virginia"; Corporal Herbie Freeman of Montevideo, Ala., who was the most lavishly "decorated" soldier boy that has been seen in this or any other port since the war began; after private soldier Generals of artillery, a distinguished Italian American, who had to brush aside his medals (awarded for bravery) before he could step out into the air and speak; so many particularly heroic officers and private soldiers that the clank of their War Crosses of France and Distinguished Service Medals awakened two thoughts after one had heard why the many decorations had been awarded to them: (a) why should the decorations be so common and (b) why, after all, should the tales of all the heroes who stepped ashore, shouldn't everybody who came back from France yesterday wear a decoration? In other words, why shouldn't the medals be even more common?

Back Home Before Christmas.

So close on the heels of one another came the troopships up the bay during the forenoon and early afternoon hours that the onlookers, watching rows almost continuously, couldn't help but feel that if Henry Ford and the entire roster of the good peace ship Oscar II—famous two or three years ago, or whenever it was—were draped along the windows of a Hoboken tenement they would rest content in the thought that the boys really had last had out of the trenches by Christmas.

In fact he younger, or dancing, set of the army and navy cotillion of sweating boy officers attached to the Hoboken port of embarkation, who so feverishly and so efficiently all day yesterday that word went out unofficially toward evening that a strike was imminent. It was said that the Army Second Lieutenants Amalgamated Workers of the World Union, Hoboken Local 1, and the unionized Navy Ensigns Union Local 25 were on the point toward evening of marching in a body to Maenecor Hall, Newark, to ask Sam Gompers to address them and give them permission to strike.

One couldn't blame the Second Lieutenants and Ensigns if they had gone on a Second Lieutenants Union strike last night: overloading them all the time were army First Lieutenants, navy senior grade Lieutenants, navy Captains, army chiefs of staff and general officers, as well as up to reporters, foreign Ensigns, newspapermen, who kept on telling the youngsters of the army and navy what they must and must not do when the troopships come in. The young Lieutenants had a notion that the landing of the troops was a personal and private affair, and the older and kinder army men had to speak to them roughly.

Wherefore it is self-evident that the officials and members of the Lieutenants Union, Locals 1 to 26, were on the verge of distraction at dusk last night. Four ships had docked in all and consequently there was the dense to pay.

Ships Follow One Another.

The good ship Henry R. Mallory, with 1,438 enlisted men and forty-five officers aboard, got into Pier 2, Hoboken, at 9:45 A. M. Close on her heels came the naval transport Manchuria to Pier 3, Hoboken, with 4,066 soldiers, sailors and marines aboard, plus forty-nine civilians.

Immediately after arrived the White Star liner Megantic, which floated along in a calm and lovely fashion into her berth at Pier 61, over the foot of the West Twenties, Manhattan, about 2 P. M., with about 400 passengers in her staterooms, some of whom were fighting sons of guns who had had a big part in putting the well known international crook, Wilhelm the Over Insured, flat on his sixth cervical vertebra.

On top of all these arrivals the United States naval transport Buttlers, once a Dutch ship, happened through the Narrows and slammed her midhook upon the floor of Gravesend Bay in the early afternoon, with thirty-five officers and men giving three rousing cheers as they rubbed their eyes and looked toward Sea Gate, Coney Island and Bay Ridge.

into an American port from the great war there was a street reception for the returning heroes. It was left for the delectable city of Hoboken to unloose the first carbuncle cheers as the scrappy boys—War Crosses dangling from their chests and rusty helmets clanking—marched up to and all the way through First street, Hub-buckin', on the way to the trains that were to take them to Camp Merritt.

Change in Debarcation Plans.

Hieretofore the trains had been backed into the port of embarkation pier enclosure where the troopships had arrived at Hoboken, the returning soldiers being bundled aboard the troop trains by the hard working army men of the port the instant the veterans stepped ashore; or they had been marched down through the port yards to trains awaiting them just across the railway station plaza.

But yesterday Hub-buckin' caught its collective breath and stood in silence as the great gates of the port of embarkation enclosure were thrown open. Thousands clustered outside the gates, too choked with emotion to cheer. Mayor Griffen of Hoboken and his official city family stood in a front line among the silent.

Whistles and sirens had tooted and chorled as the troopships had come up the bay, the Hoboken factory whistles joining in the din. But now, as the fighting lads just back from France, stepped ashore, a few feet beside the opened gates, the moment was too tumultuous for anything so cheap as cheers.

There were sharp words of command from the officers and then through the gates and upon the rough stone blocks of the Hoboken pavement limped and hobbled the gentlemen unafraid—line after line of them, smiles on their lips, the Croix de Guerre dangling from the breasts of many, the gold V, which showed a man had been wounded, decorating the coat sleeve of almost all.

All Seem Happy to Be Home.

They were swathed in overcoats, packs, dusty bundles. The metal insignia on the shoulders of their officers were dingy. Some of them still scratched themselves and blushed because they scratched. It was evident they had just come from hell's suburbs. But they looked contentedly into the awed faces of the walls of humans between which they marched, and it was evident that the tired men were glad to be home again and were very happy.

They had shuffled along the Hoboken streets amid the silence of the packed throngs for some minutes when some one cheered brokenly. The men and the women and little ones who couldn't cheer before visibly surged forward and made choking sounds. Then as the crowd swallowed its sobs and caught its breath again the shriek of a wonderful human acclamation ripped and roared down the Hoboken street. No banging drums or trumpets—there was no band in the "parade"—were on hand to stir the silent watchers into the sudden hysterical outburst.

The cheers that cracked forth thereafter until the last of the lads from the Mallory were aboard their troop trains were merely the vocal expression of all that the crowd, while silent, had felt but was too overcome to give expression to.

All that had been welling up in the hearts of the crowd was expressed by a hail, gaunt woman who ran out from the crowd of city officials standing in front of the Hoboken City Hall and touched a passing soldier boy and the arms. "God love you!" she said.

Hysterical Cheers After Silence.

That first Hoboken parade took place at a comparatively early hour of the day—the first procession of its kind in America. And during the mid-afternoon Hoboken was to be honored for the second time, when men of the fighting forces who had just debarbed from the Manchuria paraded through Hoboken streets to their
